Definition

The three-dimensional rectangular coordinate system consists of three perpendicular axes: the x-, y-, and z-axes, and an origin at the point of intersection (0) of the axes. Because each axis is a number line representing all real numbers in $\mathbb{R}$, the three-dimensional system is often denoted by $\mathbb{R}^3$.